

Business Valuation

Generate Sales with Buy-Sell Review

Are you selling in the small business market? If not, why not?

The opportunity

- Today small businesses with fewer than 500 employees account for 99.9 percent of all firms in the United States.¹
- Small firms employ over half of U.S. workers. Overall, small firms are responsible for 44 percent of the total U.S. payroll.¹
- Consider the real opportunity for you as a producer. Small business owners represent a lucrative market with significant risk protection needs. Over half of all U.S. individuals with more than $3 million in investable assets own a business.²
- In looking at the Principal Financial Group® 3rd Quarter Well Being Index results as well as other research, we know that small business owners' existing coverage levels reveal opportunities to increase sales. We also know from a LIMRA study that they want life insurance for estate liquidity and key person coverage.³
- In fact, the most common business life insurance purchases are to provide liquidity for the owner's family, manage continuity planning after the loss of a key employee, repay plans and mortgages, and cover the costs associated with a buy-sell agreement.⁴

The approach

So how can you approach a small business owner? Once you are introduced, ask when his or her buy-sell agreement was last reviewed or when the business was last valued. In the past year, our Advanced Solutions team has reviewed over 150 buy-sell agreements and prepared over 500 business valuations.

Below are some probing questions to ask based upon the most common issues revealed in our reviews:

- I see you have an installment payout for your buy-sell agreement. What is your plan for handling the cash flow?
- I see you have an optional buyout at death in your plan. How would that protect your family in the event of your death?

- I didn't see any disability language in the document. How do you plan to deal with that possibility?
- What are your plans for retirement? There doesn't appear to be any discussion of a retirement buyout.

These questions may offer a great opportunity to sell life insurance, disability insurance or other financial products. Don't miss out on this lucrative business insurance market.
